the negro as a soldier. The Southern States, it seems, has consented to this, but by the small majority of one. It yet remains to be seen whether the negroes will fight for the South as they will have done for the North. If not, the war must soon end for want of troops to sustain it on the part of the South. President Davis and General Lee are said to have been anxious for a long time past to have negro soldiers drilled, but the opposition of the planters has been too obstinate. Indignous efforts, it is said, are now being made at Richmond to fetch up lost time and to fill the negroes, and some are already said to have been intermixed with the white troops. The first heavy engagement it will be seen how they behave. If the South had loved independence more than it loved slavery it might have organised negro regiments from the first. If the policy of the North now is to press for victory and to allow the South no time to recover from each successive blow, and it is doubtful under these circumstances whether a very effective organisation of reliable negro regiments can be managed. At any rate the policy is an admission that slavery is doomed. It is the Southern echo of the abolition triumph of the North.

CONTUMPT OF COURT.—During the trial of the countess of Arundel, a funeral knell sounded persistently from the Court of St. James's, and the chief justice, in a contemptuous of the leading counsel for the plaintiff, declared angrily of "that dreadful bell" to the Chief Justice. The Honourable Justice concurred with Sir William Manning in his assertion that the countess of Arundel was sent off his tipstaff to silence the ill-gotten music. The fact that to the Judge his Honor at once ordered the contumacious ringer into custody. When the musician was taken into Court he admitted that he had received the order from the Countess of Arundel, and was in the habit of tolling, but pleaded that he was acting under orders received from the churchwardens of St. James's Church. The Chief Justice then ordered the musician to be detained in custody until the rising of the Court. The Honourable Justice also stated that it was his intention to fine the musician for his contumacious behaviour, and to order the churchwardens interested for the offender, and the musician discharged.

AUSTRALIAN MEDICINISTS.—It is commonly not difficult to find a sufficient number of persons to compose professional beggars and those who are ready to receive their challenge the sympathy of the benevolent. A very great petition and odorous garments, which form the usual dress of the beggars, and the most common of their ways. The most acute observer, however, sometimes is deceived and withhold charity when it is not his duty to do so. The case of a certain gentleman who has a fastidious regard for their own convenience, and study the gratification of taste as a satisfaction of appetite. If they cannot obtain the gratification of taste, they will not be satisfied with the labour of carrying broken victuals, but in the hope of obtaining a whole lot which can be converted into cash. One of the surgeons of the occasion was delivered by him for ten and sugar as a perquisite to a quick snack. A few days ago a feminine member of the lady gave a present of a few New Yorks and platted personal and part of a loaf, but the gift was declined with an of, offending dignity "because the parcel was too small."

A PIECE OF STONE—THE GREAT DIAMOND MONSIEUR. Gurnell's giant diamond has been purchased by Mons. Gurrell of Hayswood, Surrey, for Six hundred thousand francs, or £20,000. The historical interest attached to this stone is remarkable, and quite authentic. It formerly belonged to Charles the Bold, of Burgundy, then passed into the possession of the Sanci family, from whence it took its name, ultimately became one of the crown jewels of France, was worn at the coronations of Louis XIV. and XV.; it then passed to the Emperor of Austria, who sold it in 1797; it then came to the hands of Ferdinand VII., of Spain, who gave it to Godoy, Prince de la Paix, and from his was transferred to the Demoffid family, its last possessor.

This image shows a vertical strip of a document page. On the right side, there is a dark, textured binding edge, possibly made of leather or a similar material, which appears to be part of a book's spine or cover. The left side of the strip is a white, speckled page area, likely the inner margin or the main body of the text. The overall appearance is that of a scan of a physical document, with some visible noise and artifacts.
